

Impartiality and independence statement

INECO is aware of the relevance of some of the activities executed for the State's General Administration (hereinafter AGE), of the potential consequences to third parties and, therefore, of the need to carry them out with the highest level of impartiality and independence.

This institutional statement highlights INECO's commitment to addressing this issue and to promoting and consolidating among all its workers a culture of integrity in which independence and impartiality values prevail.

INECO has an efficient management system that guarantees proper work, the independence and impartiality of its actions, and that includes permanent monitoring tools as well as the assurance of its compliance through periodic audits.

The employees of INECO who participate in AGE's assignments with potential conflicts of interest are regularly trained and made aware of the importance and need of maintaining integrity in all their work activities, as well as in the application of established processes.

INECO undertakes to provide the best conditions for its workers to enable them to carry out their activities with total freedom and in conditions that do not limit their independence in any way, or condition their judgment due to possible conflicts of interest. It ensures the suitability of assigned personnel to activities with potential risk requiring them to reveal situations that may call into question the integrity of their actions and those of the Company.
